PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

It has long been the law that a “defendant’s right to counsel of his choice is not an absolute one, but must give way when required by the fair and proper administration of justice.” United States v. Ostrer, 597 F.2d 337, 339–41 (2d Cir. 1979) (citations omitted) (disqualifying former AUSA because successive representation “considerations are pertinent not only where the issues involved in the lawyer’s former and present representation are the same, but also where, as here, the privileged information obtained in the course of the former representation may be used . . . in a closely related matter”); United States v. Hasarafally, 529 F.3d 125, 128 (2d Cir. 2008) (recognizing that “a private party . . . can easily choose from a range of law firms”). Under the Evans test, statutes, and applicable ethical rules, and to avoid tainting the trial, Bove should be disqualified. Bove’s disqualification is necessary to safeguard the United States’s confidential information, ensure fairness, and preserve the integrity of this criminal prosecution. See United States v. Prevezon Holdings, Ltd., 839 F.3d 227, 239 (2d Cir. 2016) (citing Evans v. Artek Systems Corp., 715 F.2d 788, 791 (2d Cir. 1983)).

ARGUMENT

A. The Evans Test Applies and Calls for Disqualification

Bove appears to suggest that the Evans test, which has been used “in civil cases involving private litigants,” is separate and apart from the prohibitions in Rule 1.11 governing former government attorneys. (Opp’n 14). Bove is wrong. The applicable New York Rules of Professional Conduct are motivated by the same concerns as, and are consistent with, the Evans test. In particular, “[b]y requiring a former government lawyer to comply with Rule 1.9(c), Rule 1.11(a)(1) protects information obtained while working for the government to the same extent as information learned while representing a private client.” Rule 1.11, Cmt. 4.¹ That is the exact same concern that animates the Evans test, which “focuses on identifying situations in which there exists the potential that confidential information obtained during representation of an adverse party could be used in the present action.” Giambrone v. Meritplan Ins. Co., 117 F. Supp. 3d 259, 269 (E.D.N.Y. 2015) (emphasis in original). (See Gov’t Br. 13-14 (citing additional cases)). The Evans test applies and is satisfied here, calling for Bove’s disqualification.² (See Gov’t Br. 20-24).

First, Bove’s arguments that there is not a substantial relationship between the TIN Matter and this case are without merit. Notably, Bove does not dispute that the TIN Matter that Bove supervised involved facts that are relevant to the criminal case against Kwok and Wang. Indeed, Bove does not dispute that the facts underlying the prior matter, i.e., the TIN Matter, may be offered in the Government’s case in chief or rebuttal in this matter. (Gov’t Br. 22-23 (asserting that the Government “may offer evidence or call witnesses in its case-in-chief, or as part of a rebuttal case, related to the TIN Matter.”) (citing United States v. Escobar-Orejuela, 910 F. Supp. 92, 100 (E.D.N.Y. 1995); Ostrer, 597 F.2d at 340; United States v. James, 708 F.2d 40, 44–46 (2d Cir. 1983))). Indeed, the Government has already publicly relied on information derived from the

¹ This part of the Rule is in accord with Canon 4 of the former Code of Professional Responsibility. See McBean v. City of New York, No. 02 Civ. 5426 (GEL), 2003 WL 21277115, at *2, *4-5 (S.D.N.Y. June 3, 2003) (applying Canon 4 and the Evans test to former government attorney). Moreover, this prohibition would apply even if a former government attorney did not participate personally and substantially in a given matter. See Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers § 133, Cmt. f(ii) (“Even if not personally and substantially participating in a matter, a government lawyer or employer might overhear or otherwise learn of confidential information of the employing agency. Its subsequent use against the interests of the agency is prohibited.”).

² Even if the Evans factors were not satisfied—and they are—disqualification is appropriate if “the record supports a finding of disqualifying taint,” including where, as is the case here, “an attorney places himself in a position where he could use a client’s privileged information against that client.” Prevezon Holdings Ltd., 839 F.3d at 241 (quotation and citation omitted).

TIN Matter in arguing for Kwok’s detention. All of this is particularly significant, because as the Second Circuit recently explained, a “‘substantial relationship’ exists where facts pertinent to the problems underlying the prior representation are relevant to the subsequent representation.” Prevezon Holdings, Ltd., 839 F.3d at 239.³

Rather than contend with the fact that the two matters are related, Bove instead ignores context and leans on the Government’s use of a single word, “unrelated,” in describing the TIN Matter in the Government’s detention memorandum. (See Opp’n 16; see also id. at 1, 4, 8, 14, 27). Bove puts more weight on that single adjective, used in an entirely different context, than it can bear. The Government used the word “unrelated” in an effort to convey, succinctly, that the CFU investigation “arose independently from and was conducted independently of the TIN Matter.” (Gov’t Br. 23). Needless to say, the Government’s use of the adjective “unrelated” in that wholly different context was not an application of the “substantially related” standard under Evans, which focuses on the possibility that a former government attorney could use confidential information in a later representation. That the CFU investigation was independent of the TIN matter—that its initiation and progress was “unrelated” to that of the TIN Matter—does not make the two matters substantially unrelated for the purpose of evaluating disqualification. To the contrary, as set forth below, the substance of the TIN Matter may well play a role in the trial of the instant action.

³ Bove relies on the standard enunciated decades ago in Gov’t of India v. Cook Indus., Inc., 569 F.2d 737, 739–40 (2d Cir. 1978), ignoring the Second Circuit’s explication of the standards, in 2016, in Prevezon Holdings, Ltd., 839 F.3d 227. Despite citing Gov’t of India twice, see 839 F.3d at 240, 241, the Prevezon Court did not include in its recitation of applicable standards that issues must be identical or essentially the same to be substantially related.

The Government expects that Kwok, and potentially Wang herself, will seek to bring into the trial events that occurred during and in relation to the TIN Matter that Bove supervised, [REDACTED] [REDACTED] consider some of the items recovered during the execution of the March 15, 2023 search warrants that were obtained in this case. At Kwok's mansion in Mahwah, New Jersey, the FBI located a large safe in the basement. In that safe, Kwok maintained documents and materials including, for example: (a) a document labeled with the words "Top Secret" in a foreign language, and (b) a report in Mandarin (with English translations) documenting an October 15, 2018 meeting between officials in the United Arab Emirates and officials in China and further indicating that Kwok met with UAE officials at his Manhattan penthouse on October 4, 2018 to prepare the UAE officials for their meeting with Chinese officials. These documents and materials were concealed in a brown box labeled "Poland Spring Water," which box was stored in the large basement safe. That box also held documents that appear related to Kwok's business arrangements. As another example, [REDACTED]

[REDACTED]

In an attempt to avoid this conflict, Bove incorrectly suggests that the Government is attempting “to expand the scope of the TIN Matter to include Mr. Kwok’s earlier interactions with the FBI[.]” (Opp’n 16). [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Responding to the point that Kwok was the focus of the TIN Matter and that this is a criminal prosecution of the very same person, Bove cites a case related to an event (Hurricane Sandy) and another related in general to telecommunications mergers to argue that “general overlap” is insufficient. (Opp’n 17 (citing Giambrone, 117 F. Supp. 3d at 274, and New York v. Deutsche Telekom, AG, 19 Civ. 05434 (VM) (RWL), Dkt. 289, at 28 (S.D.N.Y. Nov. 26, 2019)). Those comparisons ignore the character of a criminal investigation and a criminal prosecution, in which an individual’s conduct, knowledge, and intent come under intense scrutiny. There is no question that, as a Government attorney, Bove supervised a criminal investigation focused on a specific person (Kwok), who is the lead defendant in this criminal prosecution and Wang’s (i.e., Bove’s client’s) longtime boss and charged co-conspirator; nor is there a dispute that Bove was supervising the TIN Matter during part of the same time period that the subject offenses in this case took place. The TIN Matter was not a general inquiry into a broad subject matter; it was focused on a person who is central to this case. Contrary to Bove’s assertion, disqualifying Bove in light of the foregoing would not prevent “a former government attorney from participating in any litigation that had any factual overlap with a matter on which the attorney had worked while in government service.” (Opp’n 18 (quoting In re Payment Card Interchange Fee and Merchant Discount Antitrust Litig., 2006 WL 6846702, at *16) (emphasis added)). It would simply—and appropriately—prevent a former AUSA from representing a co-defendant of a central subject of an investigation that he supervised where, as here, there is the potential for substantial factual overlap.⁴ The focus of the TIN Matter was Kwok; Kwok is the lead defendant in this criminal prosecution; the TIN Matter was prompted by Kwok’s dealings with the FBI; TIN began investigating Kwok during the time period of the charged offenses in this case; [REDACTED]

Moreover, accepting Bove’s arguments would require the conclusion that Bove would also be permitted to represent Kwok under the applicable Rules of Professional Conduct and the Evans test. That simply cannot be so. And if Bove is disqualified from representing Kwok, the same analysis applies to his representation of Wang. As set forth in the Government’s opening brief, to the extent Wang and her counsel enter into a joint defense agreement with Kwok and others—through which information is shared among defendants and/or subjects, and which is not uncommon in cases with multiple defendants and/or subjects—confidential information from Bove’s government service supervising the TIN Matter could be used improperly for the benefit of others besides Wang. (Gov't Br. 23 (footnote omitted)). The possibility of a joint defense agreement is far from speculative. On August 9, 2023, the Government learned from the Metropolitan Detention Center, where Kwok and Wang are incarcerated, that Bove had emailed MDC Legal on July 20, 2023 (i.e., two days before Bove filed a notice of appearance on behalf of Wang), copying Kwok's counsel, Sidhardha Kamaraju, Esq., to inquire into the "process for setting up a joint defense meeting at MDC with our clients together." (emphasis added). (Ex. E). The Government further learned that Kwok's counsel later requested to schedule a co-defendant's meeting with counsel in the MDC; in the request, Bove was listed as the sole attorney for Wang who would be attending the meeting. Id.

Second, Bove incorrectly argues that a presumption of access to relevant confidential information should not control here. In doing so, Bove attempts to distinguish district court cases, but ignores the Second Circuit's opinion in Prevezon Holdings, Ltd., 389 F.3d at 240. (See Opp'n 19-20). Bove then states repeatedly that he has no real recollection of the TIN Matter at present.⁵ Or that he is not sure what he saw or did. (Opp'n 4 ("I do not think that I saw the warrant applications")); id. ("it seems plausible to me that I discussed the TIN Matter with one or both of the line AUSAs"). Whether Bove remembers his substantial participation and oversight over the TIN Matter or claims not to is irrelevant. The Government provided authority in this Circuit that clearly held so, and common sense tells us that faded memories often reappear and can be refreshed. See United States v. Uzzi, 549 F. Supp. 979, 981–83 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) (“[m]emory is not so fixed and absolute that we can say with confidence: [the former AUSA] has forgotten everything”); United States v. Huawei Techs. Co., No. 18 Cr. 457 (AMD), 2020 WL 903007, at *5 (E.D.N.Y. Feb. 25, 2020) (“The fact that [the former Deputy Attorney General of the United States] currently has ‘no recollection of the matters’ (ECF No. 51-1) does not change the analysis.”). Bove seeks to distinguish those cases on their facts, but provides no contrary authority, and fails to contend with the underlying principle for which the Government cited them—that a failure of recollection does not absolve a conflict.⁶ Disqualification jurisprudence recognizes the potential for conflict in the future even if there is no actual conflict at the time of a disqualification motion. Wheat, 486 U.S. at 162-3 (“The likelihood and dimensions of nascent conflicts of interest are notoriously hard to predict, even for those thoroughly familiar with criminal trials.”). A claimed lack of memory now does not nullify the serious potential for actual conflict later, because memories can be refreshed. That is of particular concern here, given that Bove has not yet “personally accessed the 2019 warrant materials,” (Opp’n 16), some of which he recognizes he would receive in discovery in this case, id., and which may well refresh his memories of a matter he supervised less than two years ago.

B. Bove Should be Disqualified Under New York Rule of Professional Conduct 1.11(a)(2) and 18 U.S.C. § 207

In addition to Rule 1.11(a)(1) and the Evans test, Bove should be disqualified under Rule 1.11(a)(2) and 18 U.S.C. § 207(a). While Bove is correct that these conflict rules governing former government attorneys are “narrower” in certain respects than the considerations discussed above, such limitations are ultimately immaterial here. That is because Bove participated personally and substantially in a particular matter that is the same “matter” as this prosecution for purposes of the applicable conflict rules. (See Gov’t Br. 25-26).

1. The TIN Matter Should Be Deemed the Same Matter For Purposes of the Conflict Rules

Rule 1.11(a)(2) and similar prohibitions are based on “concerns similar to those protecting former private clients,” but “apply somewhat differently to government clients.” Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers § 133, Cmt. b. In particular, such rules balance the potential for misuse of confidential information with the risk of disincentivizing government service by too broadly conflicting former government attorneys when in private practice. See Rule 1.11, Cmt. 4.

In striking that balance, Rule 1.11—like Section 207(a) and other conflict-of-interest rules generally—first draws a distinction between, on the one hand, “matters involving a specific party or specific parties” (i.e., particular matters) and, on the other, “all substantive issues on which the lawyer worked,” and the Rule requires disqualification only with respect to the former. Rule 1.11, Cmt. 4; accord 18 U.S.C. § 207(a)(1) (permanent prohibition if, among other things, the prior matter “involved a specific party or specific parties at the time of” the former government employee’s participation); id. § 207(a)(2) (two-year cooling-off period if the particular matter was under the former government employee’s “official responsibility”).

While generally applicable legislation is not a “particular matter,” a criminal investigation of a specific individual—here, Kwok—unquestionably is.⁷ See 18 U.S.C. § 207(i)(3) (a “particular matter” includes “any investigation, application, . . . or judicial or other proceeding”). The only question, then, is whether the TIN Matter qualifies as the same “matter” as this prosecution for purposes of Rule 1.11(a)(2) and 18 U.S.C. § 207(a). The answer to that question is that it does so qualify, for the same reasons that the TIN Matter and this case are “substantially related,” as described in detail above.

Bove’s arguments otherwise are unpersuasive. Bove cites to Rule 1.11 commentary as support for his claim that the phrase “substantially related” “has been excised from Rule 1.11,” yet the commentary Bove relies on does not even mention the phrase “substantially related.” (Opp’n 9 (citing Rule 1.11, Cmt. 4)). Additionally, Bove’s reliance on the rule of lenity (Opp’n 10) is inapposite; this motion is not a criminal prosecution and Bove is not a criminal defendant. See Hughey v. United States, 495 U.S. 411, 422 (1990) (in criminal cases, rule of lenity “demand[s] resolution of ambiguities in criminal statutes in favor of the defendant”). Instead, statutes like 18 U.S.C. § 207 should inform the Court’s disqualification analysis.

2. Bove Participated Personally and Substantially in the TIN Matter

In addition to limiting disqualification to “particular matters,” Rule 1.11 also requires disqualification only if “the lawyer participated personally and substantially.” Rule 1.11, Cmt. 4; accord 8 U.S.C. § 207(a)(1); In re Payment Card Interchange Fee and Merchant Discount Antitrust Litig., No. 05 Civ. 1720, 2006 WL 6846702, at *6 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 7, 2006) (contrasting disqualification of former private attorney, which would be required when “the attorney played any role” in the prior matter, with the requirement that former government attorneys have participated personally and substantially) (emphasis in original).⁸

It is an odd choice for Bove to claim, as he does in his brief, that he did not participate “personally or substantially” in the TIN Matter, (Opp’n 10-14), while at the same time admitting (as he must) that he was “one of two Co-Chiefs” of TIN from September 19, 2019 until he left the Office on December 20, 2021, and thus was responsible for supervising the TIN Matter for over two years. (Bove Decl. ¶¶ 2-3). As a TIN supervisor, when the line assistants working on any matter in that unit—including the TIN Matter—had issues or questions, they were brought to Bove’s attention. Yet, in his opposition and declaration in this case, Bove characterizes his involvement in the TIN Matter as “sporadic and limited,” claims that his supervision was at times “nominal[],” and offers only that it is “plausible” he discussed the TIN Matter with the line assistants. (Bove Dec. ¶ 11; Opp’n 2).

In October 2020, while employed with the Office, Bove prepared a sworn declaration to a court regarding another TIN matter. In that 2020 declaration—unlike in the declaration that Bove submitted in this case—Bove confirmed that his oversight responsibilities extended to all of the matters in TIN:

Since September 19, 2019, [my Co-Chief] and I have been Co-Chiefs of the Office’s Terrorism and International Narcotics Unit (“TIN”). . . . As one of the two Co-Chiefs of [TIN], I share responsibility for overseeing investigations and prosecutions by prosecutors in [TIN]. . . . My oversight responsibilities include providing guidance to prosecutors regarding discovery and disclosure issues, helping to train prosecutors. . . .

United States v. Nejad, No. 18 Cr. 224 (AJN), ECF No. 400-1, (S.D.N.Y. Feb. 22, 2021) (sworn declaration of Emil Bove) (Ex. F (excerpted)). Bove’s 2020 declaration is consistent with the Office’s policy that unit chiefs’ oversight responsibilities require that they personally and substantially participate in all the matters under their supervision. (See Gov’t Br. n. 15).

Bove concedes that the TIN Matter was “pending” under his “official responsibility,” (Opp’n 9 (citing 18 U.S.C. § 207(a)(2))), but the available record⁹ demonstrates more: Bove’s personal and substantial participation in the TIN Matter.

Government Exhibit A is an email from Bove requesting the internal reference number for the TIN Matter so that Bove could author a case update for the Office’s executive leadership. Preparing case updates for the Office’s executive leadership is the responsibility of the TIN Co-Chiefs, part of their oversight responsibilities, and a function that necessarily requires personal and substantial participation in a matter. Indeed, in order to author an update on the TIN Matter, and to inform the Office’s executive leadership of the status of that matter (as those updates are designed to do), Bove necessarily must have had an understanding of the substance and progress of the investigation. Bove’s contention that requesting the internal reference number is an “administrative task” divorced from any substance is not a credible reading of Exhibit A. (Opp’n 12). To author a monthly case update, unit chiefs prepare summaries about pending cases including events of significant and expected future events. Those summaries are titled with the name of the matter and the internal tracking number, and are relied on by the Office’s executive leadership, including the Chief of the Criminal Division. Notably, Exhibit A is dated October 31, 2019, which is the end of the month (i.e., when monthly updates were typically due to the Office’s executive leadership). Given that the Kwok search warrants were executed in early October 2019, the October 2019 monthly update would almost certainly describe the execution of those warrants and an initial assessment of the search warrant results. (Bove Decl. ¶ 7). Tellingly, Bove does not dispute that he was responsible for authoring case updates for the TIN Matter, and does not provide any reason why he would “perform the administrative task of requesting a case-tracking number” aside from drafting a monthly update. (Opp’n 12).¹⁰

Government Exhibit B is an email from Bove to the then-Chief of the Criminal Division, which Bove contends is merely a “respon[se]” to a press inquiry forwarded to him and his Co-Chief. (Opp’n at 13). Far from it. Exhibit B demonstrates that Bove had developed an opinion, and expressed that opinion, to the Chief of Criminal Division regarding [REDACTED] [REDACTED] Exhibit B itself demonstrates that Bove was more than “generally aware,” Bove Decl. ¶ 9, of the TIN Matter, it shows he substantially participated in the matter sufficient to form an opinion on an aspect of it. In addition to the opinion Bove developed, Exhibit B demonstrates that, as of July 2020, Bove knew: (i) what “[t]he [TIN Matter] team [wa]s working” on; (ii) that the investigation was ongoing and the line assistants were “following up on leads” from the search warrant results; and (iii) there was a potential for factual overlap between the TIN Matter and the CFU investigation.

Exhibit B further demonstrates that the AUSAs assigned to the TIN Matter must have been briefing Bove about the TIN Matter and its potential for factual overlap with the CFU matter. Just 15 minutes after the Criminal Division Chief’s question, Bove responded that “[REDACTED] [the TIN Matter AUSA] is also aware of a CFU investigation . . . that involves Guo and relates to cryptocurrency investments.” This demonstrates Bove’s understanding that the matter he supervised—the TIN Matter—might factually overlap with the CFU matter, and because Bove stated “[REDACTED] [the TIN Matter AUSA] [wa]s also aware of a CFU investigation,” it follows that [REDACTED] updated Bove about what she was “aware of” that was relevant to the TIN Matter. In light of Exhibit B, it is not merely “plausible” that Bove “discussed the TIN Matter with one or both of the line AUSAs” (Bove Decl. ¶ 11). It is certain.

Exhibit B therefore demonstrates that Bove’s involvement in the TIN Matter was not just “sporadic and limited.” Indeed, if Bove was merely “respond[ing]” to a press inquiry, as he asserts, then when asked whether Bove and his Co-Chief “have any investigation” (i.e., are supervising any cases) “related to the source of funds that [REDACTED] received through his work with . . . Guo,” (Ex. B), he might have answered “no.” But rather than simply “respond” to the press inquiry, Bove went two steps further and updated the Criminal Division Chief, first, on the status of the TIN Matter and, second—recognizing the potential for factual overlap—offered that the press inquiry may pertain to the CFU investigation, which the line assistant clearly updated him about.

Furthermore, the substance of Exhibit B and, in particular, of [REDACTED] [REDACTED] was not (and still is not) “information about the CFU investigation in the public domain,” as Bove claims. (Opp’n at 13). That information is confidential Government information known to Bove and it requires his disqualification from this case.

Bove next disputes his substantial participation in the TIN Matter by offering that, because he was not involved in the process of drafting the TIN search warrants, his participation must have been limited. Approving a search warrant is not the sine qua non of substantial participation. Supervising the TIN Matter is sufficient to compel disqualification. See, e.g., United States v. Smith, 995 F.2d 662, 675-76 (7th Cir. 1993) (affirming disqualification of former AUSA who “was the immediate supervisor of the attorney in charge of an investigation in South Florida which was intertwined with the investigation and prosecution of [the defendant]” and, as supervisor, signed immunity paperwork for a witness); Huawei Techs. Co., 2020 WL 903007 (disqualifying the former Deputy Attorney General of the United States).¹¹ Particularly where, as is the case here,

¹¹ In a footnote, Bove also says he does not recall being notified of a conflict concerning his co-chief. (Opp’n 12.) [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] Accordingly, as of approximately early November 2020 through the date of that Co-Chief’s departure from the Office at the end of November 2020, Bove was the only supervisor on the TIN Matter.

Bove was the direct supervisor of two (and for several months) just one line assistant, was regularly updated on the matter, provided guidance concerning the matter, updated executive leadership concerning the matter, and became the only direct supervisor of the matter after his Co-Chief was conflicted.

Bove points out semantic differences between arguments advanced here and by the Government in Huawei. (Opp'n 18). Specifically, Bove disputes that he knew of, or even had access to, classified information. (Opp'n 11). Classified discussions are, by their nature, classified, and often oral. But more to the point, Bove's contention that he did not have access to classified information and had but limited and sporadic involvement as the direct supervisor of the TIN Matter begs questions about what Bove did in his supervision of the TIN Matter. Bove does not dispute that he was the supervisor of the TIN Matter, and that he was aware of the TIN Matter; however, Bove does not include in his declaration his general duties and responsibilities as TIN's Co-Chief. Bove has chosen to highlight only what he does not recall rather than engage with what should be an undisputed point: in the Office, unit supervisors play an important and substantial role in all cases under their charge.

C. Bove Should Be Disqualified To Avoid Trial Taint

Whether counsel should be disqualified "is a matter committed to the sound discretion of the district court." Purgess v. Sharrock, 33 F.3d 134, 144 (2d Cir. 1994). Gonzalez-Lopez, upon which Bove relies, makes clear that nothing in that opinion should "cast[] any doubt or place[] any qualification upon [the Supreme Court's] previous holdings that limit the right to counsel of choice." See id., 548 U.S. at 151 (declaring that trial courts have "wide latitude in balancing the right to counsel of choice against the needs of fairness, . . . [including an] independent interest in ensuring that criminal trials are conducted within the ethical standards of the profession and that legal proceedings appear fair to all who observe them.”).¹² A district court is well within the bounds of its discretion “where it seems more likely than not that a number of conflicts will materialize,” as is the case here. United States v. Jones, 381 F.3d 114, 121 (2d Cir. 2004). Thus, disqualifying Bove in this case would not require “automatic reversal.” (Opp’n 21).

The Second Circuit has unambiguously held that district courts have “substantial latitude” to require disqualification even where defendants have attempted to waive any potential conflict, and [the Court of Appeals] review[s] such a disqualification only for abuse of discretion.” United States v. Zichettello, 208 F.3d 72, 104 (2d Cir. 2000) (emphasis added). For the many reasons stated above, Bove’s disqualification is neither error nor an abuse of this Court’s discretion. Disqualification is compelled by the actual, and also the mere potential, for a conflict in this case.

Bove would have been correct to say that, on appeal, a defendant need not show prejudice if a court abuses its discretion when disqualifying counsel. See United States v. Gonzalez-Lopez, 548 U.S. 140, 147 (2006). But the same is true if a district court permits a defendant to proceed with counsel operating with an actual conflict of interest. “Prejudice is presumed under such circumstances.” United States v. Schwarz, 283 F.3d 76, 91 (2d Cir. 2002). And there are circumstances where counsel’s conflicts cannot be overcome even by a knowing and intelligent waiver. United States v. Fulton, 5 F.3d 605, 612 (2d Cir. 1993). (“When a lawyer’s conflict, actual or potential, may result in inadequate representation of a defendant or jeopardize the federal court’s institutional interest in the rendition of a just verdict, a trial judge has discretion to disqualify an attorney or decline a proffer of waiver.” (emphasis added).) “[E]ven where a defendant wants to waive a potential conflict, a district court still has ‘substantial latitude in refusing waivers of conflicts of interest.’” United States v. Dipietro, No. S1 02 CR.1237SWK, 2004 WL 613073, at *5 (S.D.N.Y. Mar. 29, 2004) (quoting Wheat, 486 U.S. at 162), aff’d sub nom. United States v. Genua, 274 F. App’x 53 (2d Cir. 2008).

Despite Bove’s arguments, if this Court determines, in its sound discretion, that disqualification is appropriate—and it is—then it should disqualify Bove.¹³ Whether Wang can waive Bove’s conflicts is a question that need only be reached if the Court declares that Bove may represent Wang despite the statutory prohibitions and Evans factors discussed above. Moreover, Bove’s assertion that Wang is willing to waive Bove’s conflicts assumes too much. A “waiver” by Wang cannot override the Government’s lack of consent to its information being used by Bove to advance Wang’s interest. Nor does Wang’s waiver ameliorate the potential harm to the Government, because even if Bove does not explicitly use confidential information in Wang’s defense, his access to that information may implicitly—and impermissibly—inform Wang’s defense strategy.¹⁴ Prevezon Holdings Ltd., 839 F.3d at 238 (“There is a risk that [conflicted counsel], while not explicitly using confidences, may use such confidences to guide its defense of [defendant] in other ways.”). Such conduct taints the integrity of this matter. Id. (“One recognized form of taint arises when an attorney places himself in a position where he could use a client’s privileged information against that client.” (quotation and citation omitted)); United States v. Stein, 410 F. Supp. 2d 316, 324 (S.D.N.Y. 2006) (use of information collected while in Government service is in the class of cases where an “attorney’s conflict jeopardizes the integrity of judicial proceedings.”).

¹³ Bove overstates the import of United States v. Liszewski, No. 06 CR 130 NGG, 2006 WL 2376382, at *11 (E.D.N.Y. Aug. 16, 2006). While the movant in Liszewski was the United States, the United States was not the former client to whom the conflicted attorney owed duties of loyalty and confidentiality. The former and current clients of the conflicted attorney did not join the United States’s motion. As a result, the conflicts were waivable by the criminal defendant. Id. at *11, *14. That is far afield from the circumstances here, where the Government is Bove’s former client on a substantially related matter, does not waive his conflict, and seeks his disqualification.

¹⁴ This is to say nothing of the potential harm that Bove could cause Kwok, if Kwok were to testify or if Wang were to adopt a defense strategy of blaming Kwok for the charged conduct.

CONCLUSION

Upon learning that Bove sought to represent Wang, the Government promptly alerted this Court to the potential conflict, and swiftly filed its papers after conferring with Bove. This motion is not a tactical maneuver, as Bove implies. (Opp’n 5). Rather, this motion was made to safeguard the United States’s confidential information, preserve fairness before this Court, protect the integrity of this matter, and ensure that the public can trust that Government employees join Government to serve the public good, rather than to use information gained during Government employment to advance their private interests. Bove was a unit supervisor in the Office. That position comes with considerable responsibility and opportunity. But it also carries some costs—namely, that Bove is now precluded from representations that put at issue the confidential information he learned, and to which he had access, in the cases he oversaw. In seeking to represent Wang, Bove threatens those values, and asks this Court to sanction a representation that statutes, rules of professional responsibility, and case law do not condone.

The Government's motion should be granted, and the Court should disqualify Bove from representing Wang.

Respectfully submitted,
